SUMMER AND FALL 2022
POLITICAL SCIENCE ADVISING NEWSLETTER

What are "holds" and why do they matter to me?

When's the earliest date that I can register?

What courses are being offered?
Do they fit my schedule?

Where are course descriptions for Capstones and the Special Topics courses?

What are the eligibility requirements for "Capstone" and how do I register?

Answers to these and other important questions can be found inside!
REGISTRATION HOLDS

The purpose of the registration hold is to ensure that you meet with your advisor to ask questions and receive input about your progress in the major.

Please contact your advisor for an appointment (see Degree Works if you are unsure who that is) or follow instructions received from your advisor via email. Come prepared with a list of classes you are considering, so that there will be ample time to discuss other topics important to you (i.e. minors, internships, study abroad, the mentorship program, graduate and/or law school, career plans, etc.)

REGISTRATION DATES

The order in which students can register is based on earned credits, not credits in progress.

Check Degree Works now to see how many credits you've earned, then use the link below to identify the date you'll be allowed to register.

Schedule a meeting with your political science advisor well in advance, so you'll have your plan in place when it's your turn to register!

The registration schedule can be found at https://registrar.cofc.edu/calendars/entrytimes.php

Registration for Summer 2022 begins on March 15th.

Registration for Fall 2022 begins on March 28th.

ATTENTION RISING SENIORS!
Complete your advising appointment early so you don't miss the opportunity to get the courses you need to graduate!

Registration for Summer and Fall 2022 will take place in My Portal. Go to https://myportal.cofc.edu/ and look for the tile "Registration Tools."

Capstone Requirements

Registration for capstone seminars is not done through MyPortal! See requirements below and application link on the right.

The capstone is a senior requirement for the major, designed to be completed within the last nine hours of POLI coursework. You must complete POLI 205 before taking a capstone course.

Capstones are filled on a first-come, first-served basis and enrollment is limited to 25 students to ensure a high-quality culminating experience.

It is your responsibility to complete the application for permission to enroll in a timely manner. You must have met with your advisor and have had your hold removed prior to submitting your application. Once we receive your application, if you are eligible, you will be enrolled in the course.

If you have not heard from us or been enrolled by April 15th, please contact Dr. Ragusa at ragusajm@cofc.edu.

Maymester Capstone

POLI 405.1 No Passport Required:
Globalization from a Community Perspective (France)

This capstone will explore the connections between local communities and global processes. The goal is to recognize, become informed, and critically evaluate how global processes shape and transform society and people's lives, and how communities respond to global processes.

In order to dispel the conventional notion that globalization is something happening "over there," five local, lowcountry case studies (shrimping and aquaculture, wind energy diversity and consumption, union and worker rights, migrant farm workers, and foreign guest workers in the hospitality industry) will be employed to demonstrate the presence of globalization "here."

Students will have opportunities to interact with key stakeholders via Zoom, and to explore the global-local nexus surrounding each case study.

The application for the MAYMESTER Capstone can be accessed here: https://forms.gle/LZZHSDCuVPLbeW8y5

See pages 7-8 for the FALL capstone offerings & unique application link.

Gender is a highly salient feature of American politics. But when we talk about the gender gap in voting or wages or policy preferences, we say “gender” but our variable typically measures “sex.” Sex and gender are inter-related, but gender is not fully determined by sex because not all men are masculine and not all women are feminine. Binary measures fail to capture the full spectrum of gender identities today; and by focusing primarily on differences between men and women we miss important variation in attitudes and behavior among men and among women. This capstone will begin by differentiating sex, gender, and gender identity as theoretical and analytical constructs. Next, we will dive into the debates over how to disentangle sex, gender, and gender identity in political research by reading new work across a variety of topic areas. As we read and discuss this work together, each of you will identify an area to explore further in independent research papers and presentations.

POLI 405.01 – Statecraft (Liu)
This capstone seminar examines statecraft and U.S.-China engagement. Statecraft is the art of conducting government and diplomacy. It is important to study the key challenges involving peace, development, and security that confront policymakers from the combined perspectives of history, politics, economics, and strategy. United States engagement with China has been complex, multilayered and can be better understood historically over time, at different levels, and from a variety of disciplinary and substantive perspectives. Through critical multi-dimensional analysis, we will gain a better understanding of theories and practices of statecraft.

POLI 405.02 – Gender Salience in American Politics (Ford)
Gender is a highly salient feature of American politics. But when we talk about the gender gap in voting or wages or policy preferences, we say “gender” but our variable typically measures “sex.” Sex and gender are inter-related, but gender is not fully determined by sex because not all men are masculine and not all women are feminine. Binary measures fail to capture the full spectrum of gender identities today; and by focusing primarily on differences between men and women we miss important variation in attitudes and behavior among men and among women. As we read and discuss this work together, each of you will identify an area to explore further in independent research papers and presentations.

PPLW 400.01 – Legitimate Political Discourse: Democracy, Protest, and Civility (Neufeld)
What are the limits of legitimate political discourse in contemporary democracies? Much ink has been spilled about the value and effects of protest movements and importance of civil discourse and whether it’s in decline—in short, about the norms and limits of democratic deliberation. This course will investigate the philosophical foundations of these questions by reading a variety of democratic theorists on the role of protest, civil disobedience, civility, anger, (and more!) in democratic deliberation. We will read selections from Teresa Bejan, Cheshire Calhoun, Myisha Cherry, Nancy Fraser, Chantal Mouffe, Martha Nussbaum, Olufemi Taiwo, Iris Marion Young and others.

Students with a PPLW concentration must choose PPLW 400.01 to fulfill their capstone requirement. Others will be allowed in this section only if space permits.

Registration for capstone seminars is not done through MyPortal! See requirements and application information on page 7 for Fall and page 4 for Summer.
POLI 339.01 - U.S. Intelligence Community: An Intro to Intelligence and National Security (Emerson)

The U.S. Intelligence Community is a vital institution and plays a critical role in supporting, informing, and advising the President, Congress, and policy-makers at the highest levels to advance national security and protect the homeland. Intelligence Studies is an ever-growing field of importance as government agencies within the intelligence, military, homeland, law enforcement, and diplomatic communities seek students with a background in the field. This course will provide students with a foundation in U.S. intelligence capabilities and processes. The course will highlight the core missions of collection, production and dissemination, counterintelligence, and covert action while surveying the use of intelligence in transnational issues such as counterterrorism, counterproliferation, and counternarcotics. Students, through real life scenarios and interactive experiential learning processes, will learn the various collection disciplines and begin to function as intelligence officers. Assignments will be tailored to develop the student's analytic skills to produce actionable and finished all-source written and oral intelligence products for senior national security decision makers.

POLI 339.02 - Trial Advocacy (Fisher)

This course examines the fundamentals of trial practice. The course will focus on the U.S. trial system, legal reasoning and persuasive argumentation through simulated aspects of courtroom trials. The final part of the course will be participation in a full mock trial. To this end, there will be an emphasis upon the methods of preparation and development of facts into evidence, along with tactical and ethical aspects of problems confronting the trial lawyer. This is an undergraduate course designed to engage students in critical and creative thinking with an emphasis on high impact learning, rather than an emphasis on imparting professional lawyering skills (as one would do in law school).

POLI 361.01 - U.S. Foreign Policy in Africa (Day)

This course is about American involvement in Africa. We will examine how U.S. interests and the U.S. foreign policy process have played out in Africa historically. Four substantive areas of U.S. foreign policy - peace and security, humanitarian aid, economic development, and democracy and human rights - will be considered. The course will culminate in an experiential crisis simulation that incorporates the foreign policy actors both in the U.S. and on the African continent.
POLI 399.01 Exile (McGinnis)

This course theorizes exile – the involuntary expulsion of a citizen from their community – as a specifically political phenomenon. Beginning with an examination of political community and inclusion, the course will progress to explore historic and contemporary forms of political expulsion and their relationships with different legal and political regimes. The course will conclude with a critique of contemporary iterations of exile in liberal democracies like the United States.

POLI 379.01 U.S. Policy and Latin America (Emerson)

Democratic elections, immigration, counternarcotics, counterterrorism, and interventions are issues that have dominated recent U.S. and Latin American relations. This course will provide an overview of the evolution and recent U.S. foreign relations with Latin America. Divided into three parts, the course will begin with an historical foundation. The second part will dive into 20th century relations while the third will focus on the 21st century, highlighting issues and policies with two of our main partners (Mexico and Colombia) in the hemisphere. The course will use interactive and participatory methods of teaching to develop the student's analytical, writing, and briefing skills necessary for careers as diplomats and intelligence officers serving in Latin America.

Eligibility Requirements*

Completion of 18 semester hours in political science coursework including POLI 205 with a passing grade, plus a minimum GPA of 2.8 in political science coursework and a GPA of 2.5 overall.

*Requirements may be waived under certain circumstances. Contact Dr. Jordan Ragusa (ragusajm@cofc.edu) if you lack the necessary requirements to discuss.

Course Expectations
Actively participate in the online class by completing all coursework in a timely manner. Intern 10–15 hours/week virtually or at your internship site (140 hours total for semester). Internships can be paid or unpaid.

Required Forms
Internship Learning Agreement
Students who have secured an internship and wish to receive credit must complete the internship learning agreement form (https://polisci.cofc.edu/student-ops/credit-internships.php) and schedule an appointment with Dr. Jordan Ragusa (ragusajm@cofc.edu).

Site Supervisor Evaluation Form
Interns will be evaluated by their site supervisors and the evaluation counts as a percentage of their final course grade. These forms will be distributed to students and employers at the beginning of the semester.

Students are encouraged to seek virtual internships during the pandemic. If you choose to do an in-person internship, an experiential learning waiver must be submitted prior to the start of your internship experience.

The department can assist in recommending potential internships, but students are ultimately responsible for arranging their placements.
Fall 2022 Study Abroad

TRAVEL WITH DR. STEWART!

>> PROGRAM DESCRIPTION

Come study with us this fall in the spectacular and exciting city of Florence, Italy! Based in the heart of Tuscany, this program offers students an immersive experience of Italian culture through courses and activities exploring communication and cultural practices, politics, gender roles, media, and of course, food. Participants will choose 12-16 credit hours from Communication, Political Science, and Women’s and Gender Studies courses. With sustainability at our core, we’ll also learn about the Slow Food movement, which was born in Italy. During the semester students will visit slow food producers in and around Florence, sampling artisanal chocolate, gelato, cheese and other produce. We’ll also travel to two stunning historic Tuscan cities: Siena and Lucca. An additional highlight of the program will be a 3-night excursion to the northern region of Italy, where we will enjoy Tinea Male, an international food and sustainability festival where thousands of food producers from around the world will share their culinary delights. Students live in apartments in the historic center of Florence and take their classes with CoC faculty. For students with majors in Communication, Political Science, Women’s and Gender Studies, and for food sustainability, this program offers a unique study abroad opportunity in the birthplaces of the Renaissance and the Slow Food movement.
