Course Description and Objectives:

As Americans we live under a constitutional form of government as defined by the United States Constitution. The legislative enactments, executive decisions and judicial rulings made by the three branches of government have broad implications for how we define, experience and express our roles as citizens in a democracy.

Our constitutional form of government provides distinct roles for both the federal government and for the 50 states under the concept of federalism. States, in turn, influence the affairs of 97,000 local governments. All of these inter-related government activities have profound impact and consequences on the lives, welfare and freedoms of 350+million Americans.

As major shifts occur in the geographic, cultural, political and social landscapes of America we look to our governmental institutions for rational solutions to major challenges - including the environment, voting rights, civil rights, immigration, global conflicts and our relationships with the rest of the world. At the same time our government appears so polarized by party preferences and political ideology that even the deadliest threat we have seen in 100 years- COVID-19- has become a pawn in the ideological wars.

This semester we will explore the evolution of our American system of government, including the principles and founding documents and the historic and continuing struggles to achieve this “more perfect union.”

Political Science Department Learning Outcomes:

Students who complete this course should be able to (a) identify and explain the central principles, institutions, procedures and decision-making processes of the American political system; (b) evaluate the basic strengths of the American political system through the application of political concepts and ideas; (c) relate historical events and/or developments to contemporary political issues, debates and outcomes in the U.S. and (d) develop an analytical, social science disposition toward American politics.

General Education/Social Science Learning Outcomes:

Students will earn social science general education credit for successfully completing this course. Upon completion, students should be able to: apply social science concepts, models or theories to explain human behavior, social interactions or social institutions. Students will be assessed on this outcome on the fourth assignment.
